

"The best sites are those where there's a seamless divide between the look, the content and the experience. Being able to model an interaction and understand how someone moves through a site are crucial skills in this trilogy."

- ISAAC PINNOCK

- 1. Meeting/Planning
- 2. Architecture/Mapping
- 3. Wireframes/Visual draft
- 4. Functional skeleton
- 5. Finished product

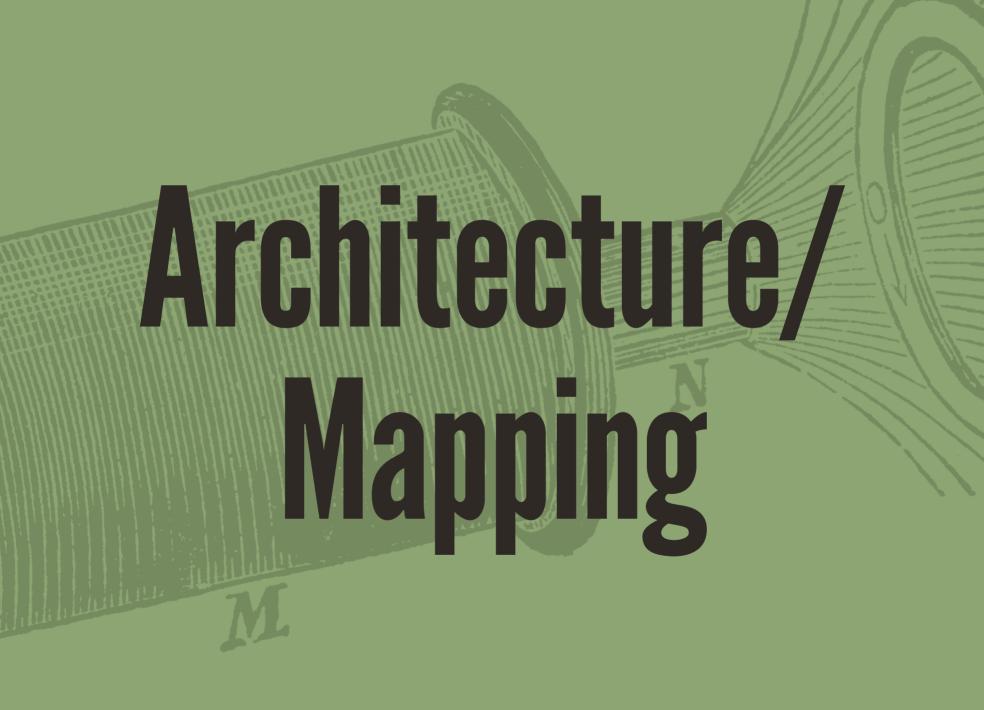

MEETING & PLANNING

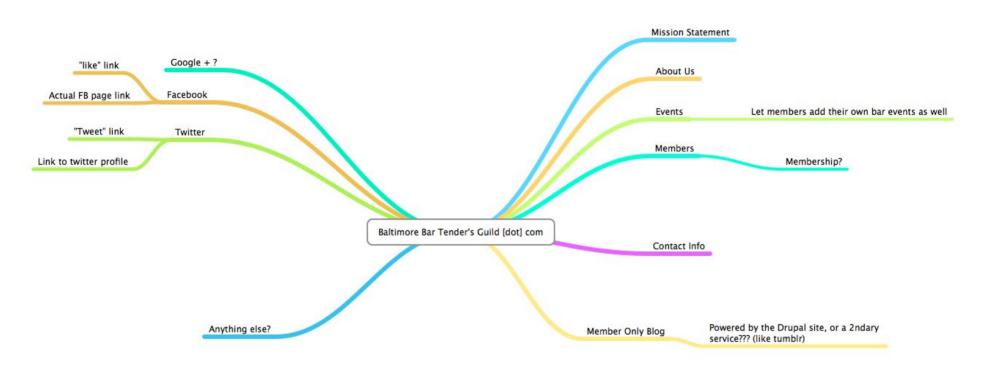

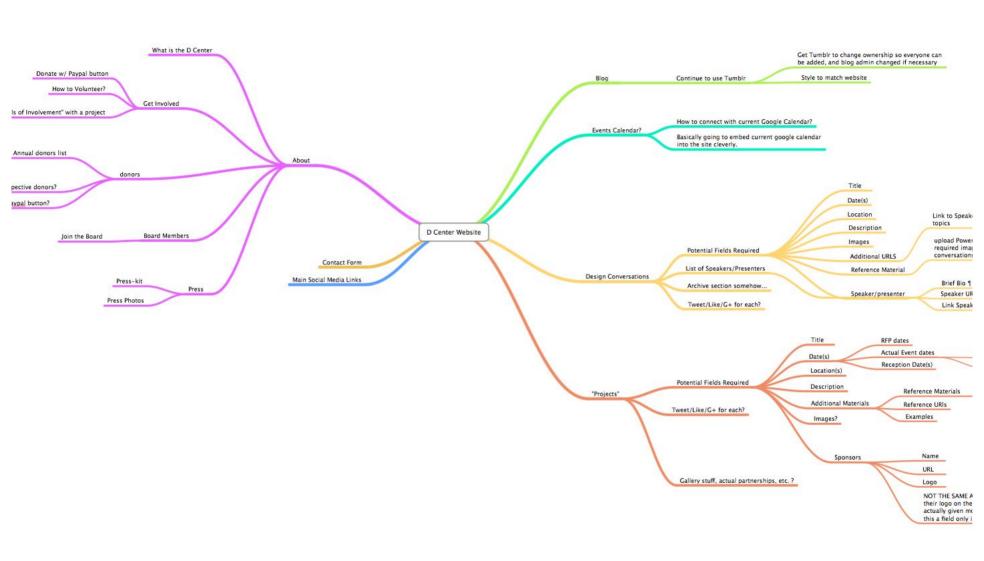

HERE ARE THE KEYS

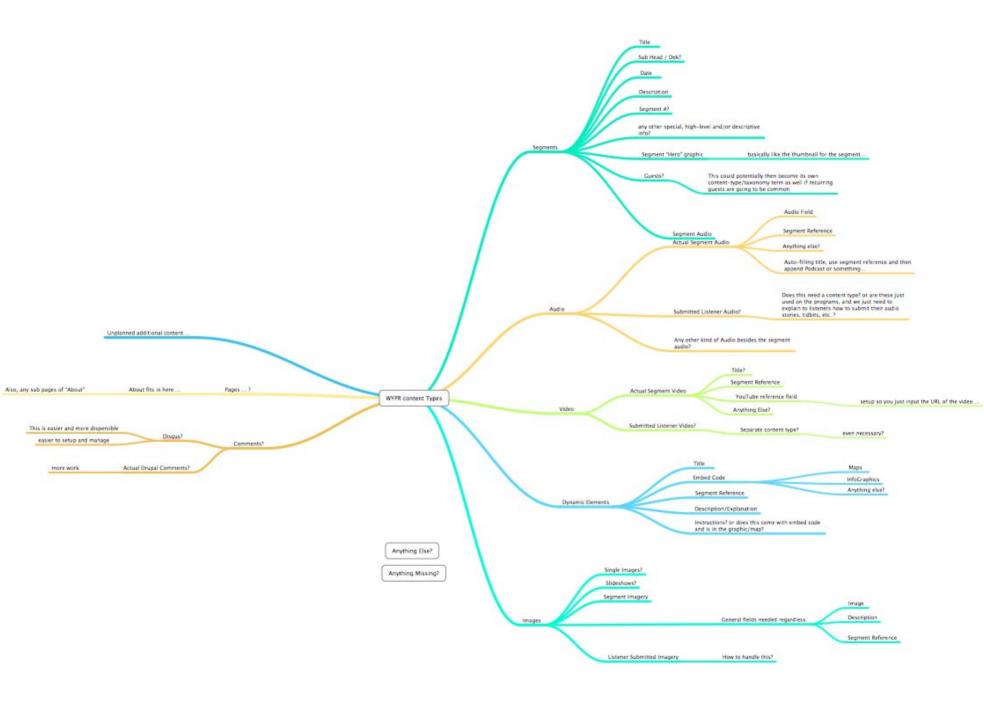

- What is the site about?
- Who is the site for?
- Does it need to take special technology into account?
- What does the site need to do?

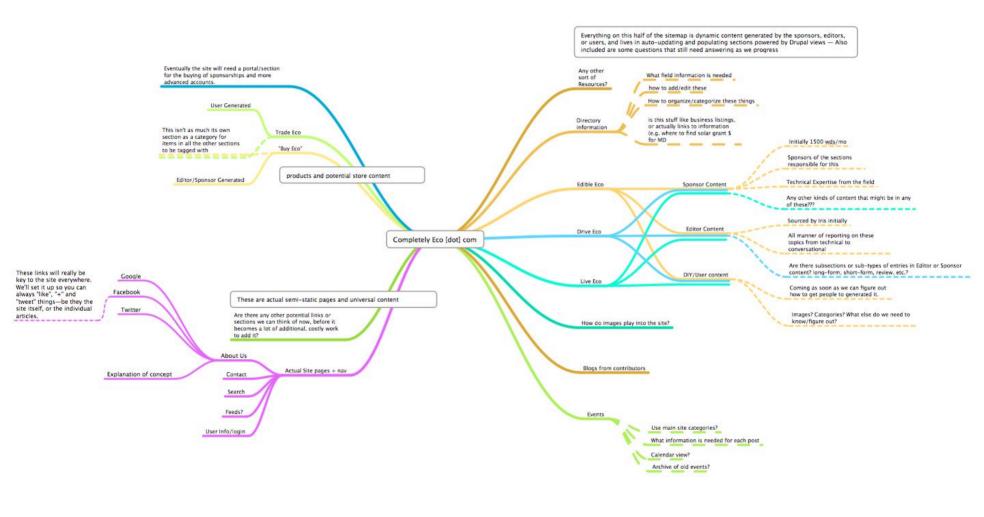

(basically you are running through all the Who, What, Where, When, Why, and How questions)

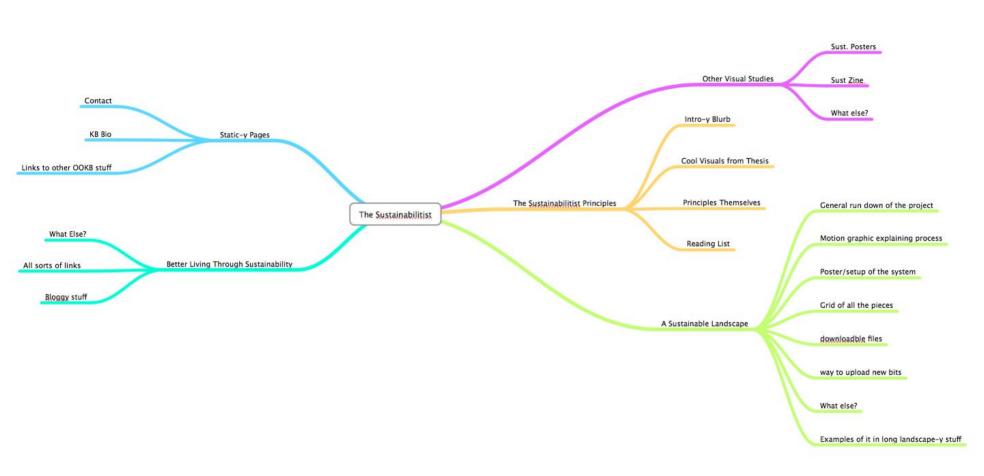

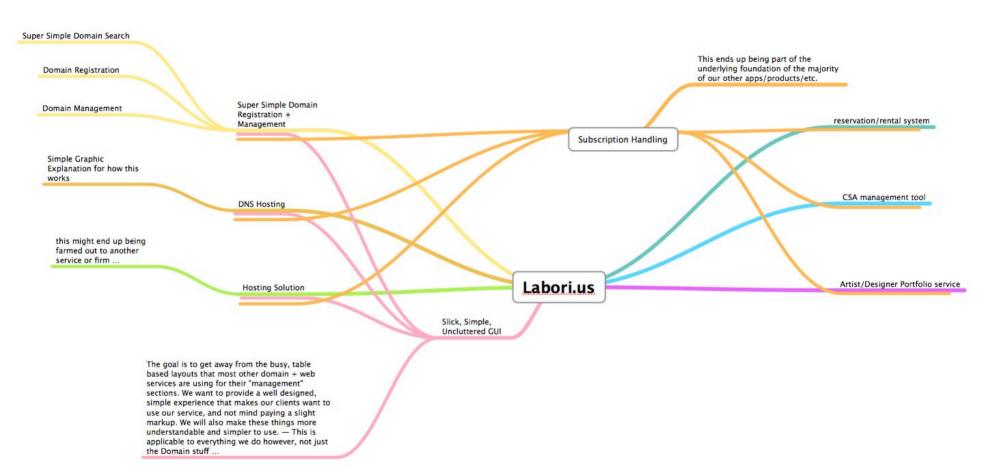

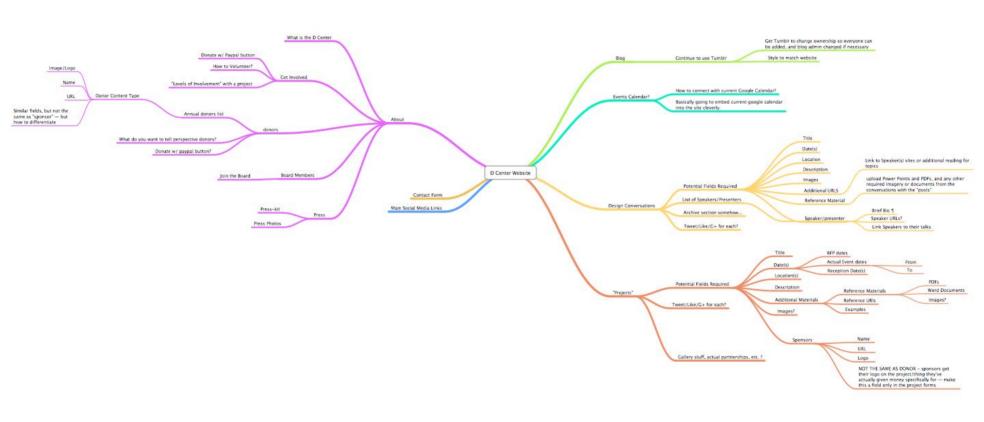

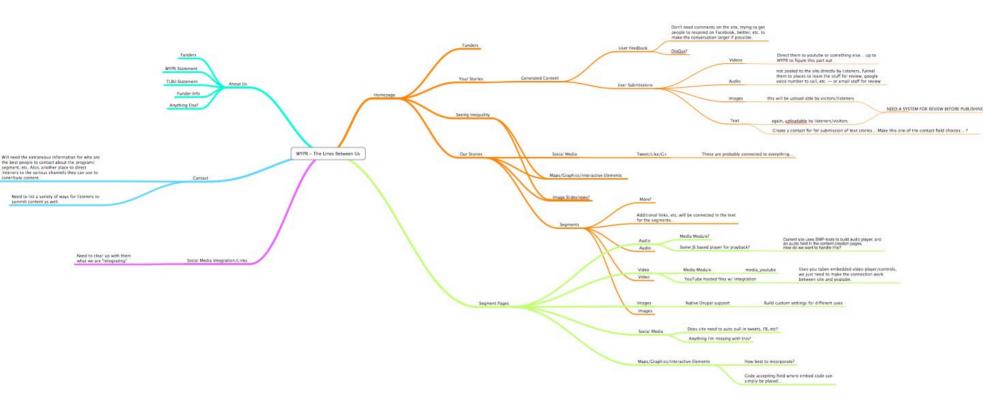

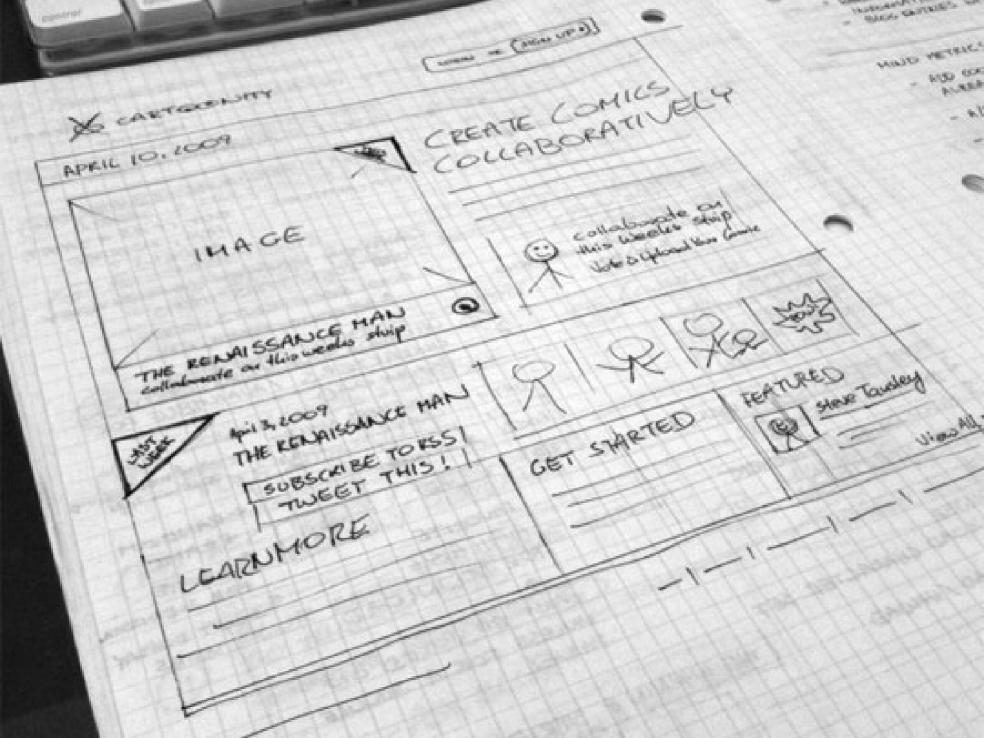

- CONTENT TYPES
- TAXONOMY
- NAVIGATION STRUCTURE
- ETC.

also called Information Architecture

(AVISUAL DRAFT)

A wireframe is a VISUALIZATION TOOL for presenting PROPOSED functions, structure and content of a Web page or Web site.

NOW, JUST TURN IT INTO SOMETHING REAL...

rnal condyle.

k joint.

At this point you should have everything you need to know to a) finish designing and b) launch the site

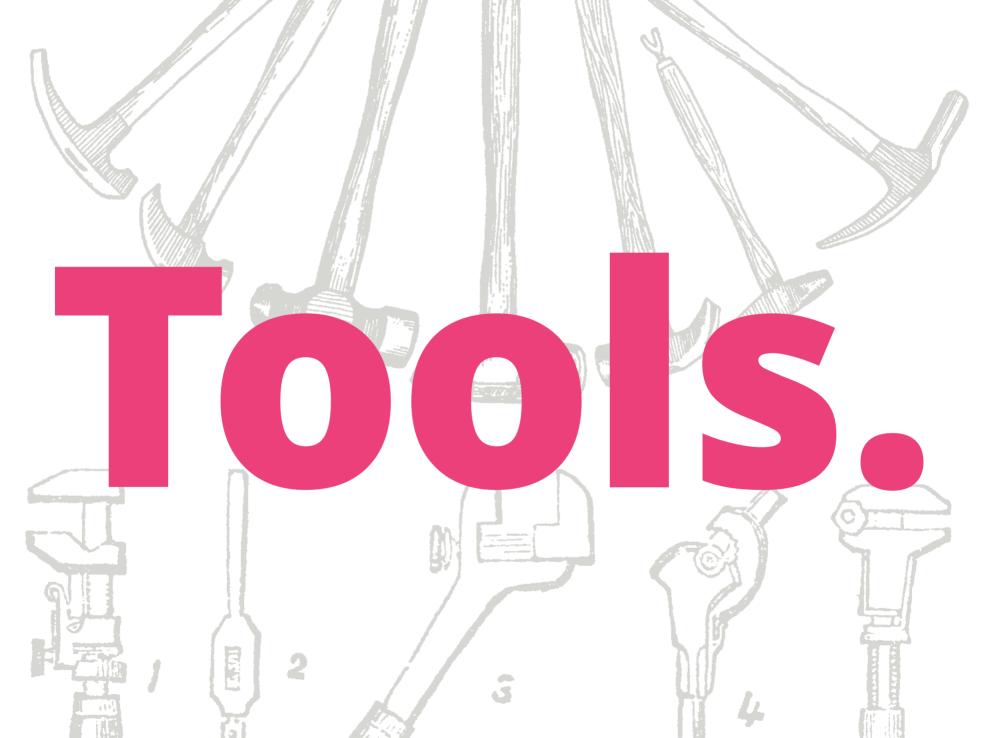

IF EVERYTHING ELSE WENT SMOOTHLY, THIS WILL JUST ENTAIL PUTTING THE FINAL GLOSS OF DESIGN OVER EVERYTHING

THEN STRUGGLE TO GET EVERYTHING TO ACTUALLY WORK AGAIN ONCE ONLINE
